In 2014, we urged lawmakers to examine the costs and benefits of marijuana legalization. We considered legislation to legalizing marijuana.

Voters in Colorado had approved the legalization of marijuana in 2012, and recreational marijuana sales began on Jan. 1. Lawmakers in New Mexico were eager to cash in on the windfall legalization was expected to generate. In 2014, the state saw a large increase in tax revenue, and it was engaged in a unique social experiment that New Mexico and other states should pay close attention to, we said at the time. We had no doubt as to the promise tax revenue available, but had concerns about the potential impact on traffic safety, workplace productivity, and public health care.

If we’re proven right this year, we are convinced that the policymakers in New Mexico were wise to give Colorado lawmakers a pass in 2014, even though the state’s current medical marijuana law is and will be, for the potential economic opportunity it offers. None of the state’s economic imperatives are now in doubt.

Even state revenue, we are convinced, has not been a downsize in 2014, but does have a potential impact on traffic safety, with the odors and negative conclusions as the center of the debate. Traffic fatalities overall decreased in 2014, but does in doubt as to whether the concern is still. However, other concerns have been addressed by new developments. The New Mexico Cannabis Commission has released a report that says legalization is paying off.

The editorial page of the Las Cruces Sun-News is open to different points of view. Letters should be limited to 300 words or less and may be edited for length and content. Letters to the editor, Las Cruces Sun-News, 1170 E. Alameda Ave., Las Cruces, NM 88001. Letters may also be sent by fax to 575-546-4526 or by email to letters@lcsun-news.com. Please include your full name, city and state from which you are writing.

In 2014, we urged lawmakers to examine the costs and benefits of marijuana legalization. We considered legislation to legalizing marijuana.

Voters in Colorado had approved the legalization of marijuana in 2012, and recreational marijuana sales began on Jan. 1. Lawmakers in New Mexico were eager to cash in on the windfall legalization was expected to generate. In 2014, the state saw a large increase in tax revenue, and it was engaged in a unique social experiment that New Mexico and other states should pay close attention to, we said at the time. We had no doubt as to the promise tax revenue available, but had concerns about the potential impact on traffic safety, workplace productivity, and public health care.

If we’re proven right this year, we are convinced that the policymakers in New Mexico were wise to give Colorado lawmakers a pass in 2014, even though the state’s current medical marijuana law is and will be, for the potential economic opportunity it offers. None of the state’s economic imperatives are now in doubt.

Even state revenue, we are convinced, has not been a downsize in 2014, but does have a potential impact on traffic safety, with the odors and negative conclusions as the center of the debate. Traffic fatalities overall decreased in 2014, but does in doubt as to whether the concern is still. However, other concerns have been addressed by new developments. The New Mexico Cannabis Commission has released a report that says legalization is paying off.

The editorial page of the Las Cruces Sun-News is open to different points of view. Letters should be limited to 300 words or less and may be edited for length and content. Letters to the editor, Las Cruces Sun-News, 1170 E. Alameda Ave., Las Cruces, NM 88001. Letters may also be sent by fax to 575-546-4526 or by email to letters@lcsun-news.com. Please include your full name, city and state from which you are writing.

In 2014, we urged lawmakers to examine the costs and benefits of marijuana legalization. We considered legislation to legalizing marijuana.

Voters in Colorado had approved the legalization of marijuana in 2012, and recreational marijuana sales began on Jan. 1. Lawmakers in New Mexico were eager to cash in on the windfall legalization was expected to generate. In 2014, the state saw a large increase in tax revenue, and it was engaged in a unique social experiment that New Mexico and other states should pay close attention to, we said at the time. We had no doubt as to the promise tax revenue available, but had concerns about the potential impact on traffic safety, workplace productivity, and public health care.

If we’re proven right this year, we are convinced that the policymakers in New Mexico were wise to give Colorado lawmakers a pass in 2014, even though the state’s current medical marijuana law is and will be, for the potential economic opportunity it offers. None of the state’s economic imperatives are now in doubt.

Even state revenue, we are convinced, has not been a downsize in 2014, but does have a potential impact on traffic safety, with the odors and negative conclusions as the center of the debate. Traffic fatalities overall decreased in 2014, but does in doubt as to whether the concern is still. However, other concerns have been addressed by new developments. The New Mexico Cannabis Commission has released a report that says legalization is paying off.

The editorial page of the Las Cruces Sun-News is open to different points of view. Letters should be limited to 300 words or less and may be edited for length and content. Letters to the editor, Las Cruces Sun-News, 1170 E. Alameda Ave., Las Cruces, NM 88001. Letters may also be sent by fax to 575-546-4526 or by email to letters@lcsun-news.com. Please include your full name, city and state from which you are writing.

In 2014, we urged lawmakers to examine the costs and benefits of marijuana legalization. We considered legislation to legalizing marijuana.

Voters in Colorado had approved the legalization of marijuana in 2012, and recreational marijuana sales began on Jan. 1. Lawmakers in New Mexico were eager to cash in on the windfall legalization was expected to generate. In 2014, the state saw a large increase in tax revenue, and it was engaged in a unique social experiment that New Mexico and other states should pay close attention to, we said at the time. We had no doubt as to the promise tax revenue available, but had concerns about the potential impact on traffic safety, workplace productivity, and public health care.

If we’re proven right this year, we are convinced that the policymakers in New Mexico were wise to give Colorado lawmakers a pass in 2014, even though the state’s current medical marijuana law is and will be, for the potential economic opportunity it offers. None of the state’s economic imperatives are now in doubt.

Even state revenue, we are convinced, has not been a downsize in 2014, but does have a potential impact on traffic safety, with the odors and negative conclusions as the center of the debate. Traffic fatalities overall decreased in 2014, but does in doubt as to whether the concern is still. However, other concerns have been addressed by new developments. The New Mexico Cannabis Commission has released a report that says legalization is paying off.

The editorial page of the Las Cruces Sun-News is open to different points of view. Letters should be limited to 300 words or less and may be edited for length and content. Letters to the editor, Las Cruces Sun-News, 1170 E. Alameda Ave., Las Cruces, NM 88001. Letters may also be sent by fax to 575-546-4526 or by email to letters@lcsun-news.com. Please include your full name, city and state from which you are writing.

In 2014, we urged lawmakers to examine the costs and benefits of marijuana legalization. We considered legislation to legalizing marijuana.

Voters in Colorado had approved the legalization of marijuana in 2012, and recreational marijuana sales began on Jan. 1. Lawmakers in New Mexico were eager to cash in on the windfall legalization was expected to generate. In 2014, the state saw a large increase in tax revenue, and it was engaged in a unique social experiment that New Mexico and other states should pay close attention to, we said at the time. We had no doubt as to the promise tax revenue available, but had concerns about the potential impact on traffic safety, workplace productivity, and public health care.

If we’re proven right this year, we are convinced that the policymakers in New Mexico were wise to give Colorado lawmakers a pass in 2014, even though the state’s current medical marijuana law is and will be, for the potential economic opportunity it offers. None of the state’s economic imperatives are now in doubt.

Even state revenue, we are convinced, has not been a downsize in 2014, but does have a potential impact on traffic safety, with the odors and negative conclusions as the center of the debate. Traffic fatalities overall decreased in 2014, but does in doubt as to whether the concern is still. However, other concerns have been addressed by new developments. The New Mexico Cannabis Commission has released a report that says legalization is paying off.

The editorial page of the Las Cruces Sun-News is open to different points of view. Letters should be limited to 300 words or less and may be edited for length and content. Letters to the editor, Las Cruces Sun-News, 1170 E. Alameda Ave., Las Cruces, NM 88001. Letters may also be sent by fax to 575-546-4526 or by email to letters@lcsun-news.com. Please include your full name, city and state from which you are writing.